The old man was transformed. His row, burning eyes deep under the shaggy brows, its dark veins writhing snakelike on the temples and forchead, from all the features-he looked like an uged tiger stiffened for a spring.

Furnsworth was made of right soldierly stuff, but he felt a distinct slilver filt along his back. His past life had not lacked thrilling adventures and strangely varied experiences with which he had lately been wearing as emergencies rather calmiy, sometimes with phlegmatic indifference. This passionate outburst on the priest's part, however, surprised him and awed hrenthless and slient. He was silent for a little while, gazing at her with the sort of admiration from which a true woman down way appalled. He saw how she loathed him, saw how impossible it was for him to get a line nearer to her by any turn of force or fortune. Brave, high headed, strong as a young leopard, pure and sweet as a rose, she stood before him fearless, eyen aggressive, showing him by every line of her face and form that she felt her infinite su-periority and meant to maintain it. Her whole personal expression told him he was defeated therefore he outckly seized upon a suggestion caught from a transaction with Long Hair, who had returned frew hours before from his parapit of Beverley.

"It pains me, I acture you, Miss Roussillon, to tell you what will probably grieve you deeply," he presently added; "but I have not been unaware of your tender interest in Lieutenant Bêverley, and when I bad bad news from him I thought it my duty to inform you."

He paused, feeling with a devil's sat-isfaction the point of his statement go home to the girl's heart.

"The Indian, Long Hair, whom I sent upon Lieutenant Beverley's trail, reported to me this afternoon that his pursuit had been quite successful. He caught his game."

Alice's voice came to her now. She drew in a quivering breath of relief. "Then he is here be is You have him a prisoner again?"

"A part of him, Miss Roussillon. Enough to be quite sure that there is one traitor who will trouble his king no more. Mr. Long Hair brought'in the lieutenant's scalp."

Allce received this horrible statement in silence, but her face blanched and she stood as if frozen by the shock. The shifty moon glimmer and the yellow glow of the lamp showed Hamliton to what an extent his devillsh crielty hurt her, and somehow it chilled him as if by reflection, but he cou' not forego another thrust.

"He deserved banging, and wou have got it had he been brought to me alive. So, after all, you should be satisfied. He escaped my vengeance and Long Hair got his pay. You see, I am the chief sufferer."

These words, however, fell without effect upon the girl's 'ears, in which was booming the awful, stormlike roar of her excitement. She did not see her persecutor standing there. Her vision, unhindered by walls and distance, went straight away to a place in the wilderness where, all mangled and disfigured, Beverley lay dead. A low cry broke from her lips. She dropped the heavy swivel balls, and then, like a bird, swiftly, with a rustling swoop, she went past Hamilton

Everything seemed open air, however, he quickly regained his activity of both mind and body and looked in all directions. The clouds were breaking into parallel masses with streaks of sky between. The moon hanging aslant against the blue peeped forth just in time to show him a flying figure which, even while he looked, reached the postern, opened, it and slipped through. With but a breath of hesitation between giving the alarm and following Alice silently and alone he chose the latter. He was a swift runner and light footed. With a few bounds he reached the little gate, which was still oscillating on its hinges, darted through and away, straining every muscle in desperate pursuit, gaining rapidly in the race, which bore eastward along the course twice before chosen by Alice in leaving the stockade, .

This class meets every Thursday night at the Baptist church, and we most heartily welcome all lovers of God's work to come and -Wind Wednesday night destroy join with us in going through the ed $2(NN) worth of property on the Bible in tifty-two lessons. The plan is simple and its object is to increase in all our hearts, a deeper love for God's word and a more intimate knowledge of that word. We are using the synthetic plan, 'Synthesis," as perhaps you know is the opposite to "Analysis." When we analize a subject, we take it apart and when we synthesize it we put it together, build it, up and consider it as a whole. We follow five simple rules in the preparation of the lesson,

- 1. Read the lesson.
- Read it continuously.
- 3. Read it repeatedly. 4. Read it independently

5. Read it prayerfully.

The first lesson was, Genesis I iith chapter inclusive. There was a good olses Thursday night to begin with, and they had prepared their lesson, and manifest much interest. We will be glad to have other lovers of the word attend and help us and let us help them. The Bible is God's word to us-it is God speaking to us. Have you time to listen to God? In the language of another we would speak of the importance of of God's word.
